Emu oil skincare products

Emu oil in a nutshell

Emu oil is a folk medicine of the Australian Aborigines. It assists the healing of burns, relieves the symptoms of psoriasis, eczema, rosacea and ichthyosis and has a beneficial effect in halting hair loss and in the stimulation of the hair bulbs. The skin thickening effect of the oil reduces the development of wrinkles.

Emu oil contains the fatty acids Omega-3 and Omega-6. Omega-3 has a beneficial effect on the heart, increase the concentration of good cholesterol (high-density lipoproteins, HDL), and reduces the concentration of bad cholesterol (triglycerides). Omega-6 (linoleic) fatty acids are highly unsaturated fatty acids which produce prostaglandin. This material is to be found in every cell of the body and is necessary for the maintenance of good health and therefore requires constant replacement.

Emu Oil Soap

Emu Oil Cream

Linoleic acid is a fundamentally important fatty acid which our bodies are incapable of producing and therefore must be absorbed through nutrition. An ideal method for that is through the consumption of emu oil.

Testimonials:

Katalin Varga, Tatabánya

For years I have suffered from an allergy to preservatives and colourings, which resulted in extremely painful, burn-like skin rashes on my limbs. In addition to taking medication I tried the application of Emu Oil Crème which not only reduced my symptoms but also speeded up the healing as well as removing the scars that had been on my skin for years. I have continued to use the cream regularly and my problems have not returned.

László Hornyik, Debrecen

For some time I have suffered from an uncomfortable skin condition. The skin on my hands dries out and cracks, often causing pain and bleeding, and making my daily life difficult. Some months ago I was able to try Emu Oil Cream and now use it regularly. To my great delight the application each time of only a small quantity has produced visible results. My skin condition was first reduced and then disappeared altogether, without having to use of other products, the often greasy residues of which impeded my activities.

As a result, honey is absorbed directly through the bowels extremely rapidly, and its blood purifying effect refreshes and rejuvenates the organism, providing excellent assistance in overcoming not only tiredness but a number of illnesses too. Honey also has a beneficial effect on heart function and on the liver, where it is deposited as starch and stimulates the production of antitoxins with which the liver neutralises any damaging or poisonous materials that have entered the body. Every living organism requires minerals and trace elements, and honey contains everything that a human needs, also including various amounts of vitamins: all the B vitamins, sufficient K vitamin (haemostatic), somewhat less C vitamin as well as factor PP (blood vessel dilator which improves oxygen supply to the cells). From the calorific and nutritional aspects, honey contains more than 70 components important to humans. It is especially important for children to be given honey regularly due to its growth stimulating effect. Honey then has an extremely beneficial effect on the human organism. The most suitable adult dose is 100-200g. per day.
